

The Spiritual Significance Of Music

JOHN BRACKETT

Music is the organization of sound and, as such, has no spiritual significance. While artists and composers may wish to express aspects of spirituality in their music, this does not mean that music somehow “carries” any intended spiritual content or message. Furthermore, music requires listeners who approach any piece or song with their own views which will probably be different from those of the original creator. Despite the necessity of sound for music, music is mute on issues relating to meaning, spiritual or otherwise.
