Music is a wonderful creation from God. What else can inspire such a range of emotions? Power, joy, sadness, and laughter; these can all be expressed in music. It is the international language that needs no translation and its connection to people is difficult to explain through scientific means. Why can a piece that is one-hundred, two-hundred, or three-hundred years old still invoke emotions in the listener? There must be some connection between music and the human spirit. People often find music emotionally healing or uplifting; this is quite remarkable when one considers that music is "just sound". Clearly there is a deeper connection between music and the human spirit than just the notes themselves.
